WEATHER

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

Light rain this morning will end this afternoon as a front moves to the southeast out of the area. High pressure will build this afternoon behind the front and maintain dry weather through the week.

Medford Weather:

The overall weather picture for the forecast area is stormy into Monday, then drying out Monday into Tuesday as the ridging sets up offshore. The upper level pattern supports dry weather for the rest of the week but there is a possibility for a front onshore next Thursday night.

Reno Weather:

Moist onshore flow will continue with the best chance of showers north of Interstate 80 today. Mild temperatures along with breezy conditions are possible today as well. Dry conditions return for the start of next week as high pressure develops over the Eastern Pacific. The high may remain in place through the end of the month.

San Francisco Weather:

A weak weather system moving through far Northern California will produce considerable cloud cover across the region today, as well as a chance of light rain in the North Bay. Dry weather is then forecast for all areas through the workweek and into next weekend. In addition, a warming trend is forecast from Thursday through Saturday with record high temperatures possible by the end of the week.

WEATHER

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY

Sacramento Weather:

A weak weather system passes through today bringing clouds and chances of rain, mainly north of the I-80 corridor. Dry weather and patchy morning fog is expected Monday through the weekend with temperatures rising well above normal by the end of the week.

Hanford Weather:

High pressure will remain over the region for the next several days. The pattern will remain dry with mainly clear skies except for night and morning fog in the San Joaquin Valley.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

Above normal temperatures will continue today due to high pressure aloft and offshore breezes. Temperatures will lower a few degrees Monday and Tuesday as weak onshore flow develops. Patchy low clouds and fog will be possible along portions of the coastline each night to morning period. Temperatures will rebound and offshore winds will develop by midweek as high pressure returns to the area.

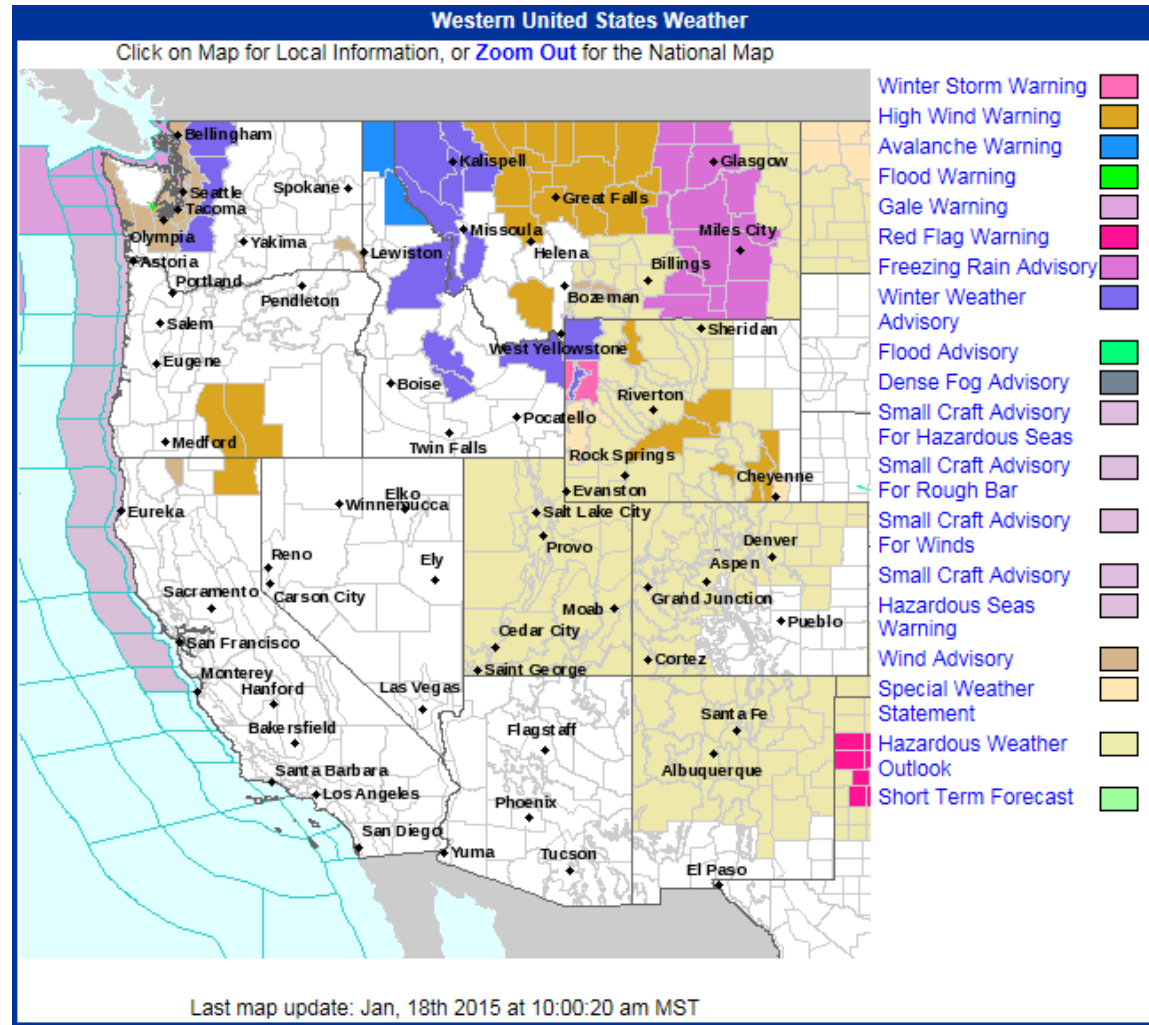

Extreme Southwestern California Including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

High pressure will prevail with continued mild weather through next week. A developing marine layer will bring increasing humidity, low clouds, and areas of dense fog tonight into Monday morning over the coastal waters and along the coastal strip.

Southeast California Weather:

High pressure over the Desert Southwest is expected to keep our temperatures above normal and skies mostly clear through the early part of the upcoming workweek. Low pressure that is forecast to drop southward into the region during the middle part of the week will then bring somewhat cooler temperatures, increasing cloudiness, and a few showers before dry weather and mainly clear skies return by the end of the workweek and the upcoming weekend.
